EDITORS' NOTE

Professor Matthew Finkin was invited to speak at the University of Maryland's Industrial Relations and Labor Studies Center on March 25, 1983. He chose, as his theme, to address two much-debated articles authored by labor law scholars associated with the critical legal studies movement: Karl Klare, Judicial Deradicalization of the Wagner Act and the Origins of Modern Legal Consciousness, 1937-1941, 62 MINN. L. REV. 265 (1978), and Katherine Stone, The Post-War Paradigm in American Labor Law, 90 YALE L.J. 1509 (1981). Professor Finkin's lecture was subsequently published in expanded form in the Maryland Law Review under the title Revisionism in Labor Law 43 MD. L. REV. 23 (1984). Professor Klare responded in Traditional Labor Law Scholarship and the Crisis of Collective Bargaining Law: A Reply to Professor Finkin, 44 MD. L. REV. 731 (1985). The two articles that follow are the final installments in this phase of the Klare-Finkin debate.
